From the Editors

The Editors of the Ghana Journal of Languages, Linguistics and Literature (GJoLLL) are proud to present this maiden issue of the journal to its readership. While we begin with a modest number of papers in this issue, we are proud of the rigorous peer review process that these papers went through before they were accepted for publication. As we strive to make the journal a good outlet for papers on all aspects of scientific research into the linguistics and literature of Ghanaian and African languages, we are also determined to continue with the tradition of quality and ethical research.

We also emphasise that there are no restrictions on the topics or theoretical orientation of papers that will be published in the journal. We welcome papers that are largely descriptive as well as papers that present theoretical analyses of Ghanaian languages, linguistics or literature. The editors also wish to make the journal a forum for the presentation of all results and findings of any scholarly activity on language, linguistics and literature. To this end, we encourage papers on field reports, book reviews, and debates on the contents of previously published papers.

The Journal is open access and freely available for readers online. In the future, we shall consider publishing papers presented at conferences organised in Ghana. We shall also consider papers written in Ghanaian languages so long as there are review experts in the field. Such papers will, like all other papers, be taken through the same peer review process and accepted for publication based on their scholarly merit.
